

Synopsis: One Winter Knight

Spurred on to avenge his younger sister's alleged rape by Broderick Coltan, ship captain Adair MacDouglas abducts Broderick's sister, Kaitlin, and holds her captive aboard his frigate bound for Constantinople where he plans to sell her to an aging sultan who will pay top dollar for a blonde woman to add to his harem.

Although his conscience nags at him, Adair remains resolute that justice is being served, even though he finds himself drawn to both Kaitlin's beauty and her fierce independent streak—a trait the sultan will never accept. It's obvious what must be done to keep her from being beaten by the old man—Adair will simply have to teach Kaitlin to be docile and accept a man's touch graciously. How hard could that be?

